NEW DELHI: An eight-year-old boy was killed and a 45-year-old man injured when a portion of an old two-storey building collapsed in outer Delhi's Kamruddin Nagar area of Nangloi on Monday morning, police said.

The boy, identified by his first name Vansh, was sitting on the staircase of the building and watching something on a mobile phone when around 25 square yards of the upper structure gave way and crashed onto him, killing him on the spot, officers said.

Initial investigations revealed that the roofs of the first and second floors were constructed using stone slabs supported by horizontal iron girders. Two water tanks placed on the first-floor roof had reportedly been leaking for a long time, corroding the girders. "The rusted iron supports collapsed under the weight of the water-filled tanks, triggering the roof to fall," a senior officer said.

Delhi Fire Services (DFS) chief Atul Garg said the fire control room received a call about the collapse at 7.12am. Four rescue teams were sent to the spot. "Two persons were pulled out from the debris — Vansh and a man identified as Sakir Ali. Vansh was declared brought dead, while Ali was treated and discharged," Garg said.

POLICE SAID THE GIRDERS IN THE BUILDING WERE CORRODED AND THEY GAVE WAY. THE BUILDING OWNER WILL BE BOOKED FOR NEGLIGENCE

A case under sections 106 (death by negligence) and 125A (act endangering life) of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita was registered at Nangloi station. While the FIR does not name an accused, but officers said the owner of the building, identified as Tarun Prakash Yadav alias Guddu, will be held liable.

The structure housed about 15 tenants. Vansh's family had moved into a rented room there just two months ago. His father, Veer Pal, works as a labourer.

Pal, in his complaint, said he had repeatedly warned the landlord about the rusting girders and leaking tanks. "He asked us not to vacate, promising repairs," Pal said.

Around 7am, Pal heard a loud crash and found his son missing. Locals helped remove the rubble. Vansh was pulled out, bleeding and unconscious, but could not be saved.

At 38, Rohit has over 11,000 ODI runs and is the highest run-scorer in T20Is. While he has set his sights on playing in the 2027 ODI World Cup, the BCCI was under the impression that Rohit might announce his retirement from ODIs after the ICC Champions Trophy held in March.
